Historical Context

Stickmuster, meaning "stick pattern" in German, emerged in the early 19th century as a variation of traditional hand embroidery. It involved the use of a perforated metal or cardboard guide to stitch intricate patterns onto fabric.

This technique allowed for greater precision and detail than freehand embroidery.

Pattern plates were an essential part of Stickmuster, providing the outline of the design to be embroidered. They were typically made of paper or thin metal and featured a series of holes arranged in a specific pattern. The embroiderer would follow the holes, using a needle and thread to create the desired design.
